

Seeing is believing

Quickgrind 'trial' offer puts carbide cutting tool remanufacturing process to the test

When a manufacturer of carbide cutting tools claims it can halve tooling costs by remanufacturing them to 'as new' condition, up to seven times, customers might be forgiven for being sceptical. To get to the truth, Quickgrind is making a special 'trial' offer.

Managing Director Ross Howell explains: "We will take up to ten tools – whether they be Quickgrind or any other brand – and remanufacture them for a total price of just £25. We want customers to see for themselves that our unique QuickEdge remanufacturing process is something completely different from traditional 'regrinding'. They will discover that the remanufactured tools perform as well as new tools – and in some cases even better."

QuickEdge is part of an alternative tooling philosophy described by Quickgrind as 'total solution engineering'. This includes a tooling performance consultancy service – to identify or create the perfect tool for each job and advise on how to use it most profitably – and a cost-cutting system for tool management.

"We understand that some companies may feel the improvements we claim are too good to be true, so we're giving them a chance to put us to the test. We have a strong reputation internationally for increasing customers' productivity and maximising their profitability, but in the UK it has proved harder to persuade people that there's a better approach to tooling. Those who take up our offer will soon see how Quickgrind's innovations can give their business a unique cutting edge."

The special offer applies to as many as ten identical 6 to 16 mm tools. For further information call Quickgrind on 01684 294090 or email enquiries@quickgrind.com.